Polynesian Cultural Center

Samoan Day Tomorrow!

*Village Chief Welcomes Center
Staff, Community:*

Samoan Village Chief, Vaimalu Toilolo promises a great day this Saturday when his village celebrates Samoan Cultural Day.

"We have new dances to share, as well as games and other activities," he says. A fashion show is planned, with students modelling traditional as well as modern Samoan costumes.

The day begins at 8:30 am with a Devotional Service which will finish at 10:00 am. At 1:45 pm, the main program will be performed in the Samoan Village.

All Center personnel and other community members are invited to attend.

Announcement from General Manager

Employees who have children are advised that children can no longer enter the Center grounds unaccompanied. Unchaperoned children age eleven and under will no longer be permitted entry at the Center gates. If parents have a need to meet with their children they should arrange to meet them at the employee gate. Children are not permitted to accompany their parents to work, and are not allowed to play in the villages or other Center areas while their parents are on the job.

The Mahalo Passes, now in widespread use by children, may only be used by adults, and parents are advised that their unchaperoned children will not be permitted to enter the Center with a Mahalo Pass.

These precautions are necessary for the safety of the children themselves and out of consideration to our paying customers.

NOTICE

Update readers are advised that due to servicing problems with our main press, issues of the paper will be erratic over the next few weeks. We hope to upgrade our equipment in order to continue serving your needs.

New Chief Announced for French Polynesia

Rene Tetuanui has been promoted to chief of the French Polynesian villages. Chief Tetuanui was born in Areva, Raiatea, and his mother, Faofa, still lives there. He first joined the Center staff in 1973, working in the Tahitian village and also in Food Services.

Following a mission to New Zealand, he returned to the Center where he most recently worked as assistant Tahitian village chief.

Chief Tetuanui completed restaurant management training in Tahiti as well as course work at BYU-Hawaii. He is married to Doreen Castillo of Kona on the Big Island of Hawaii, and they have two children.

We welcome Chief Tetuanui in his new and challenging responsibilities.

Kiribati Couple Make History

Maii Toanimatang of the Gateway Restaurant, and Iotua Tune, both BYUH students from Kiribati, made history this past week when they were married in the Hawaii Temple.

Maii and Iotua are the first Kiribati couple to marry in the temple. They met at Liahona High School in Tonga, and plan to continue with their education at BYUH before returning to Kiribati.

Kiribati, formerly the Gilbert Islands, was renamed by its people recently when they wished to be known by a cultural rather than an English name. Kiribati, pronounced "Kiribas", is a transliteration of the English name.

We wish Maii and Iotua a happy and successful future. Congratulations!

New Trainer

Grace Edmonds and George Kaka, new trainers for the Village Operations department, will be on a regular basis and share their experience with the employees.

Employees from the Fijian Village were seen recently as they attended the

Message From Board Member:

George Q. Cannon

The most important part of any successful organization is the leader. He is the one who directs, and is at the head, and carries the responsibility. He is the executive, the one who puts the program in force. He is the one who guarantees accomplishment for the organization as well as the individual success of the members of the organization. If the leader really leads, accomplishment is assured.

A good leader trains his people to be good leaders, leads them in that direction, and trains them to work as a team. It is the responsibility of the leader to prevent failure before it occurs, therefore he must study the causes of failure and destroy them. The best executive is the one who can most nearly release the full potential of the entire managerial team.

"God gave man dominion over all things," including himself. Every leader has periods of discouragement when it seems the problems are insurmountable and impossible to solve. The leader must make the supreme effort to turn the tide. Workers must be inspired if they are to be kept from breaking and giving up under stress. A Chinese proverb says: "Many owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties." The Penalty of Leadership:

In every field of human endeavour, he that is first must perpetually live in the white light of publicity. Whether the leadership is vested in a man or in a manufactured product, emulation and envy are ever at work: in art, in industry, in music, in literature. The reward and punishment are always the same. The reward is widespread recognition. The punishment fierce denial and detraction. When a man's work becomes a standard for the whole world it also becomes a target for the shafts of the envious few. If his work is merely mediocre he will be left alone. If he achieves a masterpiece it will set a million tongues a-wagging.

Whatever you write, or paint, or play, or sing, or build, no one will strive to surpass or to slander you; unless your work be stamped with the seal of genius. Long, long after a great work or a good work has been done, those who are disappointed or envious continue to cry out that it cannot be done. Spiteful little voices in the domain of art were raised against our own Whistler, calling him a mountebank, long after the world had acclaimed him its greatest artistic genius. Multitudes flocked to Bayreuth to worship at the musical shrine of Wagner, -- while the little group of those whom he had dethroned and displaced argued angrily that he was no musician at all. The little world continued to protest that Fulton could never build a steamboat, while the big world flocked to the river banks to see his boat steam by. The leader is assailed because he is a leader, and the effort to equal him is merely added proof of that leadership. Failing to equal or to excel, the follower seeks to depreciate and to destroy, but only confirms once more the superiority of that which he strives to supplant.

There is nothing new in this -- it is as old as the world and as old as the human passions, envy, fear, greed, ambition, and the desire to surpass -- and it all avails nothing. If the leader truly leads he remains the leader -- master poet, master painter, master workman -- each in his turn is assailed and each holds his laurels through the ages. That which is good or great makes itself known no matter how loud the clamour of denial. That which deserves to live -- lives!
